TABBY, in commerce, a kind of rich silk which has undergone the operation of tabbying. See the next article. TABBYING, the passing a silk or fluff under a calender, the rolls of which are made of iron or copper, variously engraved, which bearing unequally on the fluff renders the surface thereof unequal, so as to reflect the rays of light differently, making the representation of waves thereof.