

Review: This book, listed in the bibliographies of many books on the history and development of the knitting and lacemaking industries over the past several centuries, describes the rise of machines which took over the slow hand processes and sped them up to the level that they had reached by the turn of the twentieth century. Most fascinating are the descriptions and diagrams of how these machines were invented, along with the social changes they brought about.